Part II　Reading Comprehension

Passage 1

Around 30% of our planet is covered with trees. Trees do good to us and the earth in many ways, but we're cutting them down at a high speed. Since the start of human development, it is believed that we have cut down almost half the trees on Earth. So, what would happen if all of us planted a tree?

Everyone planting a tree would be an important step, but we would need to do more to protect the environment. In fact, according to a report, if we planted 1. 2 trillion trees, our environment would become much better. So that's more like 150 trees per person since there are 8 billion people now.

Trees planted near the equator (赤道) can be especially helpful, because they grow much faster in a warm and wet environment. Let's imagine that happened. In as little as 20 or 30 years, a whole forest will be built. And in 100 years, these trees would grow up, and they, along with dead trees, offer a place to all kinds of fungi (菌菇) and insects. On top of this, we could see a good influence on our mind, as studies have shown that trees can lower stress and make people happier.

But no matter how much trees offer to us, we're cutting them down at a high speed. And it does great harm to our environment. So, although tree planting is a useful way of dealing with climate change—a change in weather conditions, it won't be enough unless we lower the number we cut down in the beginning and make big changes to the way we live.

So, if everyone on the planet planted a tree, it would make a difference to the environment. And if we kept on planting them and stopped cutting them down, it could be a meaningful way to protect our world.

(one trillion = 1, 000, 000, 0000; one billion = 1, 000, 000, 000)

16. How many trees have we cut down on Earth since the start of human development?

Passage 2

The Spring Festival is coming soon! Will you try making some paper cuttings? Paper cutting is one of the traditional folk arts (民间艺术) in China. It has a long history of more than 1,500 years. People always use paper, scissors and knives to make paper cuttings.

It's difficult to tell when it started. People found paper cuts of animals in tombs (墓) in the Northern and Southern Dynasty (南北朝). By the Southern Song Dynasty, paper cutting had become an important part of everyday life. At that time, a young man would look at a young woman's paper-cutting skills before marrying her.

Paper cuttings are mostly used for decoration. In China, it is common to see paper cuttings on walls, windows, doors and mirrors during holidays. People make them to show their joy or their wishes for good luck and health. People also use paper cuttings as design patterns on clothing. They make the clothes look special and different. What's more, paper cuttings are made to be great gifts for friends and love ones.

It is easy to learn paper cutting but very difficult to make it perfect. We need to learn how to use the scissors and the engraving knife. Moreover, we need a lot of practice to learn paper-cutting skills.

A funny thing is that, in many parts of China nowadays, paper-cutting skills are still a must for women because people think they are a symbol of a clever mind.

Passage 3

We all know that Britain and the US are two countries connected by a common language. But in fact, the differences are more fun to study, as BBC did in a recent story called 8 Situations when Britons Behave Differently from Americans. We have picked out four for you. Take a look.

When someone knocks into you

If someone knocks into an American, the victim (受害者) will probably look at the aggressor (冒失者) in the face and expect an expression of regret. If, however, the victim happens to be British, the victim will say "sorry" before the other person says it.

When you get dressed for dinner

Britons don't all change into evening dresses for supper like what you may have seen in popular TV shows. But they do try to make an effort when going out for dinner somewhere nice. Americans, however, will probably wear a common shirt to a nice restaurant.

When you don't finish your food

Britons wouldn't think to take the leftovers home when dining out at a restaurant. They think the food is somehow "tainted (污染的)" because they've stuck at it with a knife and fork. But in the US, packing it up to take home is a custom.

When you get into a taxi

Britons will give the taxi driver an address, then they don't say anything with the driver before it's time to pay. Sometimes they're being taken in a wrong way, they don't like to say anything, either. In the US, however, most passengers will tell the driver which way to go after telling him or her the address.

Passage 4

To many in the Gulf (海湾), Ghanim Al Muftah is a well-known face. Ghanim was born in May 2002 in Qatar, without the lower half of his body because of a serious illness. Even though the young boy was only given 15 years to live by his doctors, his parents didn't give up on him.

Ghanim was often very sad when he was at school. No one liked to play with him. His mother comforted him that his classmates were just afraid of hurting him, not scared of him. She also encouraged the boy to communicate more with his classmates and let them know more about his illness. His mother's words cheered him up and made him become more optimistic (乐观的).

Now, 21-year-old Ghanim is an example to the world and especially to those fighting with physical disabilities. He used his weakness to develop a strong will (意志). A surprising fact about Ghanim is that he loves sports and actively takes part in football, skateboarding, ice hockey and even scuba (潜水).

Ghanim is also one of the youngest businessmen in Qatar. His ice cream business provides jobs for the people in the city. At the same time, with his family's support, Ghanim has also set up an organization to give away free wheelchairs to those disabled people in need.

The young boy lives up to the meaning of his name. "Ghanim Al Muftah" means "the winner" in Arabic. He is an example of strength and courage who teaches the world that no difficulty is big enough to prevent someone from living the life of their expectations.

Passage 5

Noisy neighbors are a common problem in a society. A noisy neighbor can make life challenging, especially if noise goes well into night, or happens during early morning hours. This situation needs to be dealt with properly, which requires your ability to keep calm. Here are some steps to do that.

The first step is that you should try to tell your noisy neighbors about the noise. This conversation should be polite, even friendly. Explain the problem honestly, and ask the neighbor to turn down the music, or not to hold parties until 3 a.m.

You should know that not all neighbors are going to follow what you have asked for, and some may act in a bad manner. If the noisy neighbors don't change their behavior, the next step should be to write the neighbors a letter. The letter should show your grievances(不满) and the dates when the noise was quite terrible.

When he noise remains going on, you'd better take the last step—report it to local authorities (权力部门) when it is really necessary. Usually, the problem is solved when the noisy neighbor knows you are going to call the police.

However, you cannot always require noisy neighbors to be quiet. When the noise remains going on, it is wise not to deal with it in an angry or retaliatory (报复性的) fashion. Just have patience and remember that communication is the most important.
