Part II　Reading Comprehension

Passage 1

Not all great meals come from restaurants. Some are served in the street. "So-called street food is delicious and can be found in nearly every country, rich or poor," says Carla Diamanti. "It's a way to get to know the people and the flavor of a place," says Diamanti, who has nibbled (小口地吃) her way around the globe. She shares some favorite snacks and snacking places with us.

When Mexico celebrates the Day of the Dead in November, crowds gather to remember lost family and friends. And then they eat. Morelia specializes in candies of the dead, including skulls made with sugar and chocolate, and sweets filled with liquor. "It's a festival of joy."

Diamanti spent 15 years working with travel companies in Jordan, and grew to love the coffee. In the desert, it's served by Bedouins, and considered a symbol of hospitality (好客). "It's offered in small cups without handles," she says. Traditionally, travelers are served three cups.

"The pretzel has come a long way," Diamanti says. It arrived with immigrants (移民) from Central Europe and now is a common snack on some city streets. "In several Middle Eastern countries, I've found the same kind of bread, the same shape."

This seasonal treat is made by boiling maple sap (树液) and then quickly hardening it on snow or ice. It then is eaten on a stick or fork. The treat can be picked up from grocery stores near Montreal and in the Laurentian Mountains.

Passage 2

It was a few years ago. A friend sent me a restaurant gift card for Christmas and I picked a sunny Sunday to use it. It felt good taking my two grown sons and daughter to a nice sit-down restaurant. The meal was delicious. When the waitress brought the check, I looked down at it. The gift card covered almost all of it. I reached into my wallet to get enough cash to cover the rest. I saw two bills in my wallet. The first would cover the rest of the bill and give the waitress a nice tip. The second bill was much larger, so I reached down to pick out the first one.

At that moment, my mind flashed back to 30 years ago. I was working as a waiter in a restaurant. It was long hours of hard work for low pay. I went home just only making enough to feed my young family. I also remembered how more than once I saw the waitresses counting their meager tips while worrying about how they were going to pay the rent and buy their kids things they needed. I remembered the pain in their eyes and sadness in their faces at the end of the day.

I blinked (眨眼) and was back in the present again. My fingers touched the smaller bill in my wallet. I smiled, pushed it back down, and picked out the much larger bill. I folded it around the gift card and covered both of them with the check. As we all got up from the table, I handed them to the hard-working waitress. “You keep the change,” I said with a smile and a happy heart.

We are all one family in this world. We live together, laugh together, and suffer together. Do your best to be a good person and love others. Replace the suffering with joy.

Passage 3

A wise teacher once told me that every teenager needs to experience a not-so-fun first job from working at a grocery store to the fast food industry.

Now I still remember my first day at a fast food restaurant three years ago. I wanted to save up money and buy my own car, so I applied everywhere I could that summer. The restaurant called me right away and I thought to myself, this is going to be easy. Within four hours of my first shift, and I heard the words that no 16-year-old boy or anyone for that matter wants to hear "Mike, there's a problem in the men's bathroom and you might want gloves for this one." I realized right away that working at the restaurant was not going to be a picnic. The manager expected a clean environment and particularly fast service with a friendly smile.

Over three years later I still work at that restaurant whenever I go home during vacations. I love my co-workers there and all the customers know who I am. Every morning the same senior citizens come in and get their morning coffees. They chat with us workers and joke around. Our smiles have just as much to do with them making us a part of their everyday lives as the coffee does.

From my first job at the restaurant, I learned team work and devotion. I also learned staying positive no matter how rough things seem to get. I will forever carry the experience that I gained at the restaurant with me as I go forward in my life.

26. Why did the author apply everywhere that summer?

_____

27. What did the manager particularly expect the workers to do?

Passage 4

A friend asks me "Why Chinese don't go Dutch （AA 制） ?" As everyone knows, westerners will go Dutch while having a meal in the restaurant. But Chinese don't go Dutch.

Chinese will pay the bill and check out generously.

Why does such a difference exist? Because the East and West culture and custom are different on the surface. I will analyze this question concretely.

First of all, food systems between China and Occident are different. Chinese put into practice Gather Dining System; Occidentals put into practice Individual Dining System. Everybody can share the delicious food of all over the table when eating Chinese food.

So to eat Chinese food is happier than to eat Western-style food. The friendship between the friends has been strengthened in this kind of atmosphere.

Secondly, Occidentals eat for health; Chinese eat for the friendship. Chinese like making friends and solidarity. Chinese value the interpersonal relationships and friendship very much. There are a lot of folk sayings in China, for example “Depend on parents at home; while leaving home depends on the friend!”, another sentence is more violent: “Insert the knife into both sides of the rib for friend!”

Chinese are a nation liking treat very much. Generally speaking, one party who propose treat will pay the bill in China. But purposes are different. For example you help me to do a thing; I will invite you to dinner in order to express thankfulness to you. Certainly, I will pay the bill. Suppose I am a company manager, you are another company manager. I talk about the business with you, and I will say: “Let’s have a meal together!” Certainly, I will pay the bill. My purpose is to congratulate success in the business and promote the friendship between us, even the friendship and cooperation between two companies.

31．What are different food systems between China and western countries?

_____

32．Are you in favour of Chinese food system? Why?

_____

33．Why does the writer think eating Chinese food is happier than eating Western-style food?

_____

34．What’s the meaning of the underlined part in the text?

_____

35．Please list some positive and negative purposes of Chinese treat.

Passage 5

When a thought has found words

Poetry is the forgotten child of literature. Few people read it for pleasure. In Western high schools, poetry is seldom taught because it is considered to be out of date and have little to do with the life of today's students.

However, compared with the situation in the West, poetry is still an important part of the curriculum (课程) in China. Recently, the Ministry of Education has increased the number of ancient Chinese poems for students to memorize and recite, from 14 to 72. Why is it important to learn poems?

First of all, poetry is a necessary part of learning traditional Chinese culture. It is a path to understanding your history and your society. It is also the key to understanding the thoughts and feelings that are common to everyone but that we may be unable to express, the joy of Li Bai dancing with the moon, for example. Everyone has feelings of joy, love, loneliness, sadness and even anger, and a good poem can put those feelings into words and bring us self-understanding.

Poems can also express beauty. In a few short lines, even something common can become beautiful. Here is a poem called Fog by Carl Sandberg: The fog comes/on silent haunches (弓腰) /and then moves on. Yes, a fog does move smoothly, silently and like a cat, and Sandberg catches that feeling and image, and makes it beautiful.

Of course, to really enjoy poetry, it has to be read aloud. After all, a poem is really just a song without music. Most ancient poems, like Homer's Epics (《荷马史诗》) and China's Book of Songs, were spoken for hundreds of years before they were written.

The American poet Robert Frost said, "Poetry is when an emotion has found its thought and the thought has found words." You are lucky that you now have seventy-two poems to learn!
