Part II Reading Comprehension

Passage 1

On March 19, Malala Yousafzai, a 15-year-old Pakistani student and women's education activist, returned to the classroom for the first time since being violently attacked by a member of the Taliban — a terrorist organization-on October 9,2012. Malala was shot on her way home from school in Mingora, Pakistan. A Taliban group took responsibility for the attack, claiming that the attack should serve as a warning toothers. Members of the group believe girls are not permitted to go to school. Malala was attacked because she was asking for girls' rights to education in Swat Valley, Pakistan.

Malala recovers from the attack at Queen Elizabeth Hospital in Birmingham, England. After a long period of recovery, Malala is starting as a nine-year student at Edgbaston High School. It is the oldest independent girl school in Birmingham, England. Though she has no plans to return to Pakistan, Malala still speaks out as a voice for change in her country and everywhere.

"I am excited that today I have achieved my dreams of going back to school. I want all girls in the world to have this basic opportunity," Malala said in a statement. "I miss my classmates from Pakistan very much but I am looking forward to meeting my teachers and making new friends here in Birmingham."

Malala has been an Internet blogger, or writer, since she was 11 years old. In 2011 she was awarded Pakistan's National Peace Award for her bravery in writing about difficulties of life and education in the shadow of Taliban. She has spoken publicly about children's rights and been nominated for an international children's peace prize.

After the attack in 2012, support for Malala poured in from around the world. The United Nations declared November 10 Malala Day. Former British Prime Minister Gordon Brown said the day honors Malala and shows the world that people of all sexes, all backgrounds and all countries stand behind the heroine.

Passage 2

How can we gain benefits from feedback practices while reducing their disadvantages? There are some ways to help you.

Feedback works best for the people whose main goal is self-improvement. It should be given in a developmental approach and future-focused, highlighting areas in which the recipient (接收者) can improve, and offering clear, actionable strategies.

First, we should consider using terms besides "feedback". Some studies have suggested replacing "feedback" with terms such as "advice", which often contain more practical information. Offering feedback as advice encourages recipients to focus on improving their future performance.

Next, focus on the advantages. Excellence in teaching is often influenced by our own feelings, with lots of effective approaches for any given topic. Research suggests we improve ourselves when others focus on our advantages. A key to effective feedback is highlighting existing patterns of excellence.

Then, we must learn how to give feedback. Delivering feedback can be challenging, especially if the person receiving the feedback is the person who has the same social position as you or the information could be sensed as critical (批评的). To avoid such situations, reducing unpleasant messages may help.

Receiving feedback, as well as giving it, is a skill. Therefore, helping teachers build skills around receiving practice-based information, feedback, or advice, such as listening with an open mind, thinking critically about the information, asking for specific advice and "making a thoughtful choice" about the quality and effectiveness of the feedback, can improve the whole process.

Finally, focus on the "what" of feedback. While much attention is given to the "how" of feedback delivery, the real value lies in the "what" of feedback, that is the richness of its information. "High information" feedback should include two important points: checking the correctness of the teacher's approach when there is only one correct method and offering information to fill gaps in understanding and guide the recipient towards a desired approach.

We know that feedback is quite important for teachers' professional development. After reading the information above, with established effective feedback methods, we can make the feedback process more effective and useful for more teachers in ways that finally improve students' learning.

21. Whom does the feedback work best for?

22. How can we encourage recipients to focus on improving their future performance?

23. What is a key to effective feedback?

24. How can we avoid challenging situations when giving feedback?

25. What does this passage mainly talk about?

Passage 3

The most wonderful thing that has come into my life is a Golden Retriever called Bonny. Bonny has been trained by an organization called Assistance Dogs for Independence, so she could help me become independent. I often rely on other people in my life, and it even keeps me from making my own decisions in most situations. Why? Because when you have to depend on others, the decision does not become totally yours.

I developed Cerebral Palsy(脑瘫) at the age of twelve months as a result of food poisoning(中毒). That made me physically disabled, making me totally rely on others. Because of that, I often felt sad. I considered myself to be useless and was often in a low mood.

My recent visit to the Spastic Centre with Bonny caused the therapists(治疗师) to notice the change in my attitude and mood. They always tried to help me become positive, but they said it was Bonny that had made such a difference. They were so impressed that they invited me to talk to Assistance Dogs for Independence about such dogs because they were sure that other people like me would also need the assistance of such a dog.

I totally agreed with them and decided to do that. The costs of carers who are paid to help people like me are very high. And family members have to spend a lot of time taking care of such people as me. With such a dog as Bonny, things could be much easier.

However, I will still need the carers' help in areas where a dog can't help. I just want to say such a dog is really helpful to such people as me.

26．Why can't the author make his own decisions sometimes?

27．How did the author develop Cerebral Palsy?

28．What does the underlined word "assistance" in Paragraph 3 mean?

29．What does the author think of carers for such people as him?

30．What do you think of such dogs as Bonny after reading the text? Why?

Passage 4

Marga Allen might be around 93 years old. However, she wouldn't put her feet up. Every week, she leads a 90-minute fitness class in her community for her ladies, and the youngest of them is 60. The class is a mixture of Scottish dancing, line-dancing and routine. "I want to make it fun for them," says Marga , "I've been teaching classes since 1965." At that time, 8 ladies attended her class, but now there are as many as 18.

And when Marga isn't out, she is a writer of poetry. She has written 6 books and is now going on a seventh. "I write in the evenings, about anything and everything," say Marga. In writing about her life, Marga isn't short of materials. Born in the 1920s, Marga was a gifted pianist from a young age and even won a scholarship to the Royal College at the age of 14. Marga stopped work as a railway worker when she had the first child. Then she was a volunteer of the Red Cross for more than 40 years.

She now has four grandchildren and four great-grandchildren; the youngest of them is just six-month old. In spite of her astonishing activity level for her age, Marga says that loneliness is the concern of society and that all the things she does still don't fill up her time.

Whenever she gets lonely or down, she picks up the phone and chats with friends, which makes her in high spirits. "I miss people most of all. But a lot of people are lonely, and I'd love to help them all."

31. Why does Marga Allen give a fitness class in her community each week?

32. Why doesn't Marga Allen lack materials when writing about her life?

33. What does the underlined part in Paragraph 1 mean?

34. What does Marga Allen usually do when she feels depressed?

35. What do you think of Marga Allen? And why?
