(Mike is telling a story. It happened when he was seven.)

It was New Year's Eve. In the morning, I heard Grandma tell Mum she needed a football for the New Year's Eve dinner.

"A football for the dinner? What's it for?" I wondered. "Anyway, I will get one! I can do something nice for Grandma."

I remembered my friend Joe had an old football. I went out quietly and found him. I gave him my favorite model car in exchange for his football.

I took the football home, shined it and put it on the living room table secretly. I waited in my room for Grandma to notice it.

"Mike!" Mum shouted. I ran to the living room. "Why can't you put your things where they belong? Get the football out of here!"

"But it's for Grandma! She said she needed a football for the New Year's Eve dinner." I said.

"A football for the dinner?" Mum laughed, "No, Grandma needs a fruit bowl, not a football."

"Fruit bowl sounds like football! I have done a silly thing!" I went back to my room, embarrassed and disappointed.

Before dinner, Mum came in and asked me to meet my uncles and aunts. When I walked into the living room, Grandma was showing them a fruit bowl with the old football in its center. I was surprised.

Finding a good work-at-home job is not easy. Although you see all the online advertising, there aren't that many of them. Those that are available may require that you live in a certain area or spend at least some time in the office. Others may be only part-time jobs.

Keep in mind that the skills needed for home employment are similar to those needed for working in an office. You'll also need a home office with a high-speed Internet connection, phone, fax, computer, printer, and other basic office equipment.

To get started, consider your job search as your job. Spend as many hours per week on your job search as you would spend working. If you're looking for full-time work, you should be spending full-time hours seeking a job.

Networking(人际联系) remains the top way to find a job and it does work. Develop contacts—friends, family, even the other job seekers—anyone who might have the information you need. You can take a direct approach and ask for job information or try a less formal approach and ask for information and advice. Contact everyone you know and tell them you want to work from home. You may be surprised by the people they know and the job information they can provide.

16. Why is it difficult to find good work-at-home jobs?

Because they may require that you live in _____.

17. Besides the skills for home employment, what else do you need?

You also need _____.

18. How much time should you spend searching for a full-time job?

You should spend _____.
