Part Ⅱ Reading Comprehension (40%)

Passage 1

Directions: Read the following passage. After reading it, you should give brief answers to the 5 questions (No.11 to No.15) that follow. The answers (in no more than 10 words) should be written after the corresponding numbers on the Answer Sheet.

A man wondered if his wife had a hearing problem. One night he stood behind her while she sat reading and asked, "Honey, can you hear me?" There was no response, so he moved closer. "Honey, can you hear me?" There was still no response, so he moved right behind her. "Honey, can you hear me?" "For the third time—yes!"

The inability to hear and understand spoken language is one of the most significant sensory issues that affect older adults. Hearing loss may result from perceptual(感知的) problems in the brain itself. Training programs, such as learning to lip-read, can help older adults optimize(优化) the hearing they do have.

The joke at the beginning shows an important truth about age-related hearing loss: the person with the problem may be the last one to admit it. Many individuals who begin to struggle with hearing loss go through a period of denial; after all, it's easier to tell yourself that other people speak unclearly than it is to confront a significant listening problem. Left untreated, the social isolation created by age-related hearing loss can negatively affect an older adult's quality of life.

It may come as a surprise to learn that baby boomers(出生于婴儿潮时期的人), the first generation exposed to loud music on a regular basis, may actually have better hearing than their parents' generation. This could be due to a decline in smoking rates, lower rates of employment in industrial jobs, and a greater use of hearing protection. However, their own children may not be as fortunate, given the tendency of teenagers to listen to music via earphones at high volume.

11. Who had a hearing problem in the joke?

12. What can help older adults optimize their hearing?

13. What would be the first reaction when people find they suffer hearing loss?

_____.

14. Baby boomers may have _____ hearing than their parents.

15. Why may baby boomers' children not be so fortunate?

Passage 2

Directions: Read the following passage. After reading it, you should give brief answers to the 5 questions (No.16 to No.20) that follow. The answers (in no more than 10 words) should be written after the corresponding numbers on the Answer Sheet.

A simple message has helped carry Emily Sue Snyder, 32, out of her darkest hours, including hopelessness, domestic violence and a suicide attempt. Now, she is sharing the encouraging expression with anyone who can receive it: "You are enough."

Snyder, a hairstylist(发型师) and mother of two young sons living in Tulsa, Oklahoma, makes it her daily mission to remind others of their value.

"You're always enough; it doesn't matter if you're at your lowest point," Snyder told USA TODAY. "You're still enough to be worthy."

Nearly a decade after trying to take her own life, she began leaving small handwritten motivational (励志的) notes in gas stations, grocery stores—"almost anywhere I went," she said.

Conversations about mental health struggles during the pandemic inspired her to spread the positive messages, such as "hey, you're doing a great job!" or "you are loved".

People would share the cards online as they found them. This warmed Snyder's heart, she said.

Her efforts to spread kindness—and the size of her cards—grew in March of 2021, when Snyder put on a red coat during rush hour in the middle of Sapulpa, Oklahoma. She stood on a corner alone for two hours holding a large bright-green poster that read "you are enough".

The outpouring of love from passersby flooded her, she said.

"The thing that really got me was the teenagers and kids that rolled down their car windows to tell me they love me," Snyder recalled. "It made me realize everybody needs something positive and a little bit of hope in their lives."

She calls her mission "Stay Another Day: Suicide Prevention and Awareness".

Last month, she was "shocked" that a group of 25 joined her recent sign-holding event.

"People are really eager to be part of the movement to let people know they're loved," she said.

16. What is the expression that has helped Snyder out of her darkest hours?

_____.

17. The most important thing for Snyder to do every day is to _____.

18. Where did Snyder leave her encouraging notes?

19. What did the outpouring of love from the passersby make Snyder realize?

20. Why did a group of 25 people join her recent sign-holding event?

Passage 4

Directions: Read the following passage. After reading it, you are required to complete the outline below it (No.26 to No.30). You should write your answers briefly (in no more than three words) on the Answer Sheet correspondingly.

When you are writing businesss letters, you need to notice the following tips:

Limit Them to One Page

By definition, business letters should be short and to the point, preferably one page in length. Studies have found that busy business people do not like to read beyond the first page, and will actually delay reading longer letters.

Keep Them Formal and Factual

Generally speaking, the tone and content of business letters should be formal and factual. Feelings and emotion do not have a place in business letters.

Carefully Plan Your Letter

Before writing the letter, take a few minutes to list all of the specific points you need to cover.

Remember, the purpose of the letter is to tie up all of the details on the subject at hand, so that more letters won't have to be written back and forth.

Be Customer Friendly

When writing directly to customers, always focus on their needs and wishes. Think in their way and imagine what it would be like receiving your letter.

Use Non-discriminatory Language

Make sure that you avoid language that is specific to gender, race or religion in all business letters, either to other businesses or to customers. For example, use "workforce" instead of "manpower", or "chairperson" rather than "chairman".

50. The taxi driver often reminds passengers to take their belongings when they leave the car.

51. The beginning of love is to let those we love be just themselves, and not change them into the image in our mind. Otherwise, what we love is only the reflection of ourselves we find in them. The happiest people don't necessarily have the best of everything, and they just make the most of everything coming along their way. When you were born, you were crying out loud and everyone around you was smiling at you. However, when you die, you are the only one who is smiling and everyone around you is crying for you. The bright future is based on the forgotten past. You can't get on well unless you let go of your past failures and worries.
