Have you ever run into a careless cellphone user on the street? Perhaps they are busy talking, texting or checking updates on WeChat without looking at what is going on around them. As the number of this new "species" of humans has kept rising, they have been given a new name—phubbers(低头族).

Recently, a cartoon created by students from the Central Academy of Fine Arts has put this group of people under the spotlight. In this cartoon, phubbers bury themselves in their cellphones. A doctor plays with his cellphone while letting his patient die, and a father doesn't know that his child has been lost for he is using his mobile phone. A chain of similar events eventually leads to the destruction of the world.

Although the ending sounds exaggerated, the damage phubbing can bring is real. Your health is the first to bear the effect and result of it. "Constantly bending your head to check your cellphone could damage your neck," doctors say. Also, staring at cellphones for long periods of time will damage your eyesight gradually, according to the report.

But that's not all. Being a phubber could also damage your social relationships and drive you away from your friends and family. At reunions with family or friends, many people tend to stick to their cellphones while others are chatting happily with each other and this creates a strange atmosphere.

It can also cost you your life. There have been lots of reports on phubbers who fell to their death, suffered accidents, and were robbed of their cellphones in the daytime. Those are all because they concentrate on their cellphones too much.

At first sight, the cyber classroom looks no difference from other ordinary ones. With a closer look, however, students will find that there is a big screen which displays whatever the teacher puts on the "blackboard"—an electronic writing pad on his desk, and there are also three cameras busily working at different angles in the room. At the moment, an English class for students majoring in finance is going on in the room, where there are 50 students of varying ages from 20s to 40s. The students are listening carefully and watching English words continuously popping up on the big screen.

The class is over for the students while the session is not over for the technicians, however. In the technology support room, television is still showing the English class and, on a nearby computer screen, three windows are playing video shots at different angles—the teacher who was lecturing, the teacher's writing on the "blackboard", and the students who were listening. The technicians said that these were the videos to be sent to other teaching spots. When the registered students type in their ID and passwords, they will see on the screen a total of 60 files of previous sessions. Cyber classrooms give convenient learning conditions and a chance to study for those who are kept out of the scheduled class.

This reminder (提示) is intended to offer guidance for using e-mail. This is not a "how-to" document, but it is rather a document that offers advice to prevent you from being cheated or troubled by e-mails.

Studies show that knowledge workers spend about 20 hours a week doing e-mail and one-third of that e-mail is useless. Still worse, 70% of this e-mail gets handled within six minutes of arrival and the average worker is interrupted every three minutes. As a consequence, there is a cost to our organizations. While we can't control what we receive from the outside, we can make some progress from the inside. Please read this paper and take action by following its instructions. Many thanks go to Earl Hacker(CIO, WBB Consulting, Inc.) for providing some of this information from an internet site.
