A detailed written contract between you and the contractor(承包人) you hire is essential to any renovation or home repair project, no matter what its size is. Even the smallest job should be put in writing.

Why? To begin with, a written contract constitutes a binding legal agreement between you and your contractor. It spells out the responsibilities and rights of both parties and ensures there is a clear record of the agreement between you and the contractor.

A proper contract also reduces your risk. It helps safeguard you from financial loss or personal liability in case of accidents or injuries during the project.

Finally, a contract establishes the foundation for a good working relationship between you and your contractor. A detailed and clearly written contract reduces confusion and misunderstandings and helps you both see the work the same way.

Should you feel awkward about asking for a contract? Absolutely not! Professional contractors run a business and know that a written contract is an indispensable part of good business practice. It protects them as well as their customers. But what if a contractor suggests that you go ahead without a contract, or won't put anything on paper? Don't do it! The risks are simply too high.

11. It is essential to make a written _____ between you and the contractor when you have your house repaired or innovated.

12. In the contract both sides should spell out the _____ and rights of both parties.

13. Secondly, a good contract can reduce _____.

14. Thirdly, a good contract can _____ for a good working relationship.

15. A written contract is an _____ of good business practice.
